

STRONG BID FOR MINING TEMPLE

Substantial Operators to Form Powerful Organization on Wednesday Evening.

WHERE DENVER FELL DOWN

FAILED TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF ITS OPPORTUNITY.

Mining men will gather at the Commercial club at 8 o'clock next Wednesday evening to complete the organization of the Utah branch of the American mining congress. It is expected that important steps will be taken at the meeting toward securing the mining temple for Salt Lake. Interest in this matter has greatly increased in Salt Lake since it was learned that the mining men of Denver have become alarmed at the activity here, and have passed resolutions demanding that Denver remain the location of the still un-built mining temple.

"Instead of passing resolutions," said a mining man yesterday, "Denver ought to begin to raise the $1,000,000 which that city was to spend upon the mining temple. Why, Salt Lake mining men did more in a few minutes than Denver has accomplished since it was named as the location for the temple. Samuel Newhouse offered a site worth at least $85,000, and D. C. Jackling promised a subscription of $50,000.

"All this was done when some of the Utah mining men got together for the purpose of forming the Utah branch of the mining congress. With this accomplished at the first meeting, before the tremendous importance to Salt Lake of the mining temple had been fully explained, it is reasonable to expect that there will be interesting developments on Wednesday night.

Where Denver Fell Down.

"Denver has no right to make complaint against the activity of Salt Lake. Denver was named as the permanent headquarters of the mining congress in 1894 on the understanding that the city would raise $1,000,000 for a mining temple. The state of Colorado was expected to appropriate $200,000 for the temple, but the state appropriation was actually $10,000. That is as far as Denver has ever got. The city has 'fallen down' completely, and Salt Lake, which can and will 'make good,' has a right to step in.

"Salt Lake is nearer the center of the mining regions of the west than Denver, and would be a better location. Had Salt Lake been named in the beginning, the temple would probably now be a real instead of an is-to-be structure.

"If the temple is built here, it will mean much for Salt Lake. It will attract hundreds of investors here, and the result will be the finding of the means with which to develop many regions which cannot go ahead without capital with which to put them in a producing condition.

"Salt Lake should lose no time in this matter. Seattle is pulling hard for the prize. If we allow the mining congress to go to that city, we will lose more than the mining temple. Next year, Seattle will have a great exposition, at which the resources of the northwest will be displayed. These will interest capitalists, and they will make investments. The result will be that when a man in the regions about Salt Lake tries to find money with which to put promising properties upon a paying basis, he will learn that the northwest has been there first and that the intermountain regions will have to wait."

Will Form Organization.

H. L. Thompson, who came to Salt Lake about six weeks ago to organize the Utah branch of the American mining congress, says that the branch here will be the strongest in the country.

Directors of the organization will be named at Wednesday night's meeting. Officers may be elected and committees named, but this is not certain.

There will be a discussion of the mining temple, and it is expected that pledges may be secured from some of the leading mining men of substantial subscriptions to the fund for the building.

The list of members of the Utah branch is as follows:

Samuel Newhouse, Jesse Knight, David Keith, D. C. Jackling, John A. Kirby, A. J. Bettles, C. W. Saxman, D. MacVichie, J. D. Wood, W. H. Child, David Evans and J. William Knight, life members.

UNDERWRITERS LAUNCH FIGHT AGAINST TAXATION OF INSURANCE COMPANIES

The question of the taxation of insurance companies will be decided in connection with the consideration of life insurance laws and the establishment of a state insurance department by the next legislature. The question has already started a determined fight to prevent, if possible, the taxation of insurance companies, and the following statement was issued yesterday on behalf of the local underwriters' association:

"The next legislature will be called upon to consider life insurance laws and the establishment of an insurance department. Among all the important questions will be that of the taxation of insurance companies, or in other words, the taxing of policyholders. It is not too early to invite at this time the attention of, not only every lawmaker, but every holder of a policy to this question, and not least, the advance of this time for consideration.

"John Stuart Mill in his 'Principles of Political Economy' says that a tax upon life insurance 'is a direct discouragement of prudence and foresight.' Mill's view is practically accepted by McCullough, who states that such a tax 'discourages that providence and foresight, encouragement of which ought to be an object with all prudent governments,' and 'seeing the vast importance of insurance, it may well be doubted whether it ought to be charged with any duty, however slight.'

"Professor Zartman of Yale university, a specialist on the subject of insurance, in concluding an exhaustive review on the subject, says: 'We conclude, then, that taxation of life insurance assets and premiums is wrong. If it is wrong, the taxes should not be levied.'

"These expressions of the views of persons who have given special study to this subject harmonize with the opinions of all authorities we have found who have gone below the mere surface of the question. No person who has taken the trouble carefully to consider the real objects and purposes of life insurance, the high sentiments that move the insured to carry it, and the effects of such taxation on the cost of life insurance or on the amount of insurance in force, undertakes to justify it. With one accord well informed people condemn it. They agree that its very existence is attributable to a misunderstanding of life insurance and of the true meaning and effect of the tax, supplemented by a desire to get money for the revenue where the money can be gotten, without much regard to the right or the wrong of the thing.

"If a premium income tax did not correspondingly increase the cost of insurance or reduce the amount of it, and if it could be justified on any ground, yet it is discriminatory to impose this tax on life insurance alone, and the rate imposed is excessive.

"The man who pays a premium upon a policy providing a death benefit for his family may surely be given credit for being wholly unselfish, for he knows that he will not profit by it himself, and that he will not be present to see his loved ones enjoy the fruits of his unselfish devotion to their welfare.

"Why should the state 'tax this man for his most worthy and commendable act in guarding his family from misery and want after he has passed away? 'If this is a fair and honorable thing to do, would it not also be fair and honorable to demand a portion of the contents of the contribution boxes at our churches, for these offerings are often collected for the benefits of the sick and injured in the hospitals, and for the widows and orphans, as well as for other benevolent purposes?

"This tax is often referred to as a tax upon thrift, and so it is. But it goes farther than that. It is a tax upon calamity. Human misfortune and sorrow are made to pay tribute to the state treasury. It is true that the tax gatherer is not at the bedside of the sick or injured, or of the dying, demanding for the state its calamity tax. It is collected in advance from the premiums. If this money must be raised for the state by a penalizing tax, why not collect it from the man who falls or refuses to provide for his dependents, instead of from the man who performs this humane and imperative duty?

"In Utah it is hoped that the question of right and wrong may be carefully weighed, and in the radical endeavor to create revenue some other reason for taxing life insurance should be advanced than that 'we need and must have the money.' A glance into the real conditions will develop the fact that the cost of the maintenance of the present insurance machinery in the state is but about $2,000 annually, while the annual revenue received is nearly $40,000. It is felt by those interested that to increase the tax for the present 1 1/2 per cent to 2 per cent, as proposed at the last session of the legislature, would be an act of injustice unequalled in the history of state legislation."

ANOTHER COFFEE WRECK

What's the Use When There's an Easy Way Out.

Along with the coffee habit has grown the prevalent "American Disease"—nervous prostration. The following letter shows the way out of the trouble:

"Five years ago I was a great coffee drinker and from its use I became so nervous I could hardly sleep at all nights. My condition grew worse and worse until finally the physician I consulted declared my troubles were all due to coffee.

"But being so wedded to the beverage, I did not see how I could do without it, especially at breakfast, as that meal seemed wholly incomplete without coffee.

"On a visit some friends deprived me of coffee to prove that it was harmful. At the end of about eight days I was less nervous, but the craving for coffee was intense, so I went back to the old habit as soon as I got home, and the old sleepless nights came near making a wreck of me.

"I heard of Postum and decided to try it. I did not like it at first, because, as I afterwards discovered, it was not made properly. I found, however, that when made after directions on the package, it was delicious.

"It had a soothing effect on my nerves and none of the bad effects that coffee had, so I bade farewell to coffee and have used only Postum since. The most wonderful account of the benefit to be derived from Postum could not exceed my own experience. 'There's a Reason.'

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read 'The Road to Well-being.'

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.
